

Responsibilities and Restrictions

Introduction

Welcome, and thank you for joining the development team of JNT. Your role as a developer comes with both trust and responsibility. This document outlines the responsibilities and restrictions associated with contributing to JNT.

Its purpose is not to impose rigid control, but rather to ensure clarity, maintain quality, and protect the integrity of the project. By defining what is expected and what is out of bounds, we aim to create a productive and respectful development environment.

1 Representing the Project

As a developer of JNT, you are a representative of the product. Your actions—both in your work and in public—reflect on the project and its team. Therefore, professionalism is essential in all forms of communication, especially in public forums, on social media, or in any context where you are identified as affiliated with JNT.

Please communicate thoughtfully, respectfully, and in a way that upholds the reputation of the project.

2 Ownership and Advocacy

As a JNT developer, you are expected to treat the project as your own. This means taking pride in the product, defending its reputation, and contributing to its success with care and intention. While you may not hold legal ownership, you do share in the responsibility for its quality, stability, and public image.

If the project is unfairly criticized or misunderstood, you are encouraged to clarify or defend it respectfully and factually, without engaging in hostility or personal attacks. Constructive dialogue is always preferred.

3 Confidentiality

During your time working on JNT, you may have access to internal discussions, proprietary code, unreleased features, or sensitive project information. This information must be kept confidential unless explicitly approved for public disclosure.

Sharing or leaking any protected material without permission is considered a breach of trust and will result in removal from the project and potential further action, depending on the severity of the breach.

Confidentiality applies during your time with the project and continues even after your involvement ends.

4 Honesty in Public Communication

As a representative of JNT, you are expected to be truthful and transparent in all public interactions related to the project. This includes statements made on social media, forums, interviews, and any other public-facing platform.

Deliberately spreading false or misleading information about the project, its capabilities, its team, or its roadmap is strictly prohibited. Misinformation damages trust both within the team and with the public and can severely harm the reputation and credibility of JNT.

If you are unsure about what can or cannot be shared publicly, seek clarification from project leadership before making any statements.
